Global Climate Accelerator for Young People

host a pitch for the planet

You provide the platform.

We provide the pitches.

Together, we help young ideas go further.

Pitch for the Planet is Project Earth's global showcase for young environmental innovators aged 8–18.

Following the success of our first international event at the Royal Institution in London, we are working with hosts worldwide to give more young people a serious platform for their ideas.

Project Earth provides the pitches

- Receives and reviews submissions
- Selects young innovators
- Manages communication
- Prepares pitchers
- Records feedback and follows up opportunities

You provide the platform

- An inspiring venue
- An engaged audience
- Promotion through local networks
- Presentation facilities
- On-the-day event support

Together, we create the impact

- Young people are heard
- Experts and investors connect
- Ideas receive useful feedback
- Promising innovations progress
- A local community forms around action

A simple, high-energy format

We recommend an afternoon event centred on approximately 15 short pitches from young people, supported by one or two short keynote contributions.

The emphasis stays firmly on the young innovators.

The audience is part of the process: listening, encouraging, advising, connecting and helping promising ideas move forward

Why host a Pitch for the Planet?

A Pitch for the Planet brings young innovators together with the people who can help them. Our first event welcomed students from across the world, and Project Earth is now following up the innovations presented there—connecting young people with expertise, advice and opportunities.

This is not simply an event.
It is the beginning of what happens next.
